

THE SAME FIVE
QUESTIONS WE ALWAYS ASK:

No. 12

Justin LONG

He hates pork. Vegans, don't get too excited.

"When I was starting out, I played dorky guys. My character on Ed was painfully awkward—that's how I got Dodgeball," says Justin Long, aka "the Mac guy." But then "some heavily medicated casting director was like, 'He seems kind of cool,' and I started playing the Everyman," he adds. The 28-year-old actor (who's next up in this summer's Live Free or Die Hard) swears he prefers the dorky roles because it's easier to root for the underdog. For instance: "On the Mac commercials, John Hodgeman [the PC guy] is so charming, I want to cradle him and give him gentle kisses." Funny, I know several ladies who would say the same regarding Justin. —Annemarie

1: What do you think happens when you die? I think about the afterlife a lot. I've been having existential crises since I was a kid. My dad is a philosophy professor, and I grew up talking about things like that instead of how well I pitched in the Little League game. That's why I'm obsessed with, like, ghost stories. I'm comforted by the idea that there are ghosts out there.

2: Last time you pulled an all-nighter? It involved me, Tom Sizemore, 14 hookers and a bag of meth. I'm kidding. I don't party the way I once did. Now I'm looking for a house, and I have a girlfriend and a dog.

3: What word makes you cringe? Pork. It's not even about pigs. I like pigs.

4: Craziest place you've ever had sex? That question just made me cringe. I would have to say Tom Sizemore's guest room.

5: If you were invisible for one day and could spy on a famous person, who would it be? Kim Jong Il. Or K-Fed. For the same reasons.

PHOTOGRAPHY BY SASHA EISENMAN

We would love to watch some porn on this Mac. Instead, we'll just admire his Local Celebrity T-shirt and Paper Denim and Cloth jeans.